Without Water,
there is no Life;
without Water,
there can be no Peace.

10,000 people - mostly children - die every day from water and sanitation related diseases. Poor water resources management condemns half the people on Earth to crippling poverty and threatens sustainable development, human health, food security and peace.

Access to water is a fundamental and inalienable human right - but it is not fully protected by international law or most national constitutions.

2003 is the International Year of Freshwater. Many promises have been made by the international community, but there is no agreed road map on how to address the global crisis, or how to finance the enormous and essential tasks ahead, and controversial issues such as privatisation and large dams create disputes within the water sector.

This deadlock needs to be broken.

The International Dialogues on Water for Life and Peace will be an action -orientated conference. Mayors of Cities, Presidents of Regions, UN officials, NGOs, academics, stakeholders and scientists will examine the heart of the world water crisis and launch practical decentralised cooperation and water solidarity initiatives to help address it.

Join us in Bologna and Reggio Emilia to help make water an instrument for life and peace around the world.
